About the Seminar

The One-Day National Seminar on "Innovative Approaches in Fisheries, Ecology and Biological Resource Conservation", organized to celebrate World Fisheries Day 2026, aims to provide a platform for academicians, researchers, research scholars and students to exchange scientific knowledge and discuss innovative approaches to sustainable fisheries, ecological management and biological resource conservation. The seminar seeks to promote advances in fisheries science, sustainable aquaculture, freshwater fish diversity and responsible fisheries management. It also aims to enhance understanding of environmental pollution, ecotoxicology and biological monitoring for ecosystem health assessment. The seminar will encourage interdisciplinary research and technological innovations in biological sciences, particularly the applications of biotechnology in fisheries, aquaculture and natural resource management. It will also highlight molecular approaches, including DNA barcoding, conservation genetics and biodiversity assessment, alongside emerging technologies for species identification and biodiversity monitoring. The Seminar seeks to promote scientific awareness, evidence-based environmental management and the sustainable utilization of biological resources for ecological balance and long-term sustainability.
